Facility Types

Off-Street Trails (8-14' Wide)

Off-street trails, also referred to as greenways, are wide shared paths for both walking and bicycling. They typically go through natural areas and follow streams or utility corridors.

Sidepaths (8-14' Wide)

Sidepaths can also be considered greenways and also provide space for both walking and bicycling. They have a similar look and feel to off-street trails, but run parallel to roadway corridors.

Facility Types

Separated Bike Lanes (5-6' Wide)

Separated bike lanes provide a dedicated space for bicyclists that is physically separated from vehicles. Buffers provide vertical and horizontal separation from traffic and can be formed by parking, concrete curbs, or flexible delineator posts

Sidewalks (5'+)

Sidewalks are narrower than sidepaths but still provide separated, accessible space for people walking and rolling along side a roadway. Sidewalks in downtown areas can also have space for benches, outdoor dining, and landscaping.

Slow Streets

- Many streets in small or large communities can become great spaces for walking and bicycling, even without sidewalks or bike lanes. Intentionally slowing vehicles down and adding shared lane markings and signage can create an environment where all users can comfortably share the street. Sidewalks should be included on slow streets in downtown contexts but may not be needed in lower-volume residential contexts.
